Most male horses that will not be used for breeding are castrated at around 12 - 15 months of age.[1] Uncastrated male horses have high levels of testosterone, which can make them difficult and even dangerous to handle. If you are thinking about getting your horse castrated, make sure that you schedule an appointment with your veterinarian. Castration is a surgical procedure that must be performed by a veterinarian.

Castrating a Horse in the Field. Castrating a male horse, called gelding, can be done at a veterinary hospital but is often done in the field. When gelding is done on the premises where the horse lives, there is no need to transport the horse and the animal can wake up in familiar surroundings rather than in a confined space.
